

PROJECTED PASSION

A vibrant collage of historical cinema-related images. At the top, a large, glowing film projector dominates the right side. Below it, a group of women in 1940s-style dresses and hats are posed. In the center, a man in a suit and glasses stands next to a sign that reads 'THE EXAMPLES OF PERFECT ENGINEERING - LAND ROVER - ROYAL ROYALTY - FORGOTTEN PLANET'. To the left, a man in a suit is shown in a smaller inset. The background features various movie posters and signs, including 'Princess of the Nile', 'Thrills - Mystery - Drama', 'Picture House', and 'Coming at Heart'. The overall scene is set against a backdrop of a city street at night, with buildings and streetlights visible.

The History of Cinema in Salisbury

Richard Nash and Frogg Moody

COMING AUGUST 2021 (Hobnob Press)

THE MOST COMPREHENSIVE HISTORY OF CINEMA IN SALISBURY EVER TOLD!
Projected Passion tells the story of the cinema in Salisbury to the end of the 20th Century. Extensive research using a range of sources, including individuals' personal archives and memories, newspaper reports and promotional materials, has resulted in a detailed and serious historical account of local cinema, but presented in the authors' 'light-touch' style that has previously proved so accessible and popular.
